FUKUSHIMA – FIVE YEARS AFTER

30' (GER)

Even five years after the catastrophe, the effects of the tsunami still determine people's life in Fukushima.

Before the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear disaster in March 2011, 7368 people lived in the town of Naraha. Located less than 20 kilometres away from the Fukushima Nuclear Power Plant, Naraha was one of the first communities to be completely evacuated after the uncontrolled nuclear meltdowns occurred in three reactor buildings. After intensive efforts to decontaminate the area and enormous investments in rebuilding the town's infrastructure, the former citizens are now being asked to move back into their old homes.
